The Master's Process

Forkner's approach to bird drawing is both meticulous and intuitive. He begins by studying live birds in their natural habitats, observing their postures, flight patterns, and interactions. This intimate knowledge is then translated onto paper through a combination of pencil sketches, watercolors, and digital techniques.

Forkner's drawings are not merely pictorial representations; they are works of art that convey the essence of each bird. His brushstrokes effortlessly capture the delicate plumage, the glint in their eyes, and the subtle movements that bring them to life.
