The colonists arrived on Roanoke Island on July 22, 1587. They were part of a larger expedition led by Sir Walter Raleigh, who had received a charter from Queen Elizabeth I to establish a colony in the New World. The colonists built a small fort on the island and named it Fort Raleigh. They also planted crops and began to explore the surrounding area.

In August, Eleanor Dare gave birth to a daughter, Virginia. She was the first English child born in the New World. The colonists were initially optimistic about their new home. However, they soon began to experience difficulties. The food supply was scarce, and the colonists were often sick. They also had conflicts with the local Native Americans.

In 1588, John White returned to England to seek supplies. He left behind 115 colonists, including his daughter, granddaughter, and son-in-law. When White returned to Roanoke Island in 1590, he found the settlement deserted. The only clue to the colonists' fate was the word "Croatoan" carved into a post.

The fate of the Lost Colony of Roanoke has been the subject of much speculation. Some believe that the colonists were killed by the Native Americans. Others believe that they were captured by pirates or Spanish explorers. Still others believe that they assimilated into the Native American population.

The mystery of the Lost Colony of Roanoke has never been solved. However, the story of Eleanor Dare and her fellow colonists continues to fascinate people around the world. It is a reminder of the dangers and hardships that the early colonists faced in the New World.
